“ As a cousin, I share your sadness. Growing up we did not call him Gene. We called him Eugene. Uncle Nook called him Snooky. I am not sure why. His Father Roy and Mother Helen lived in an apartment on the second floor of his Grandparents, Herman and Mary. I last visited Gene on Thursday, June 11. I came after a Reunion Dinner at Rodney's. I did not have my cell phone with me and I just stopped by. I knocked at the door. It was open. Gene was sitting comfortably on his sofa, of course, with his oxygen hooked up, watching TV with his cat quietly sitting close by observing me. We talked about an hour. I told him of my surprise 80th birthday party. I had sent him photos in an e-mail but he was not currently checking his mail. I asked about his brother Ron and sister Debby. He told me about the fountain he had installed outside near his porch. Gene said he enjoyed sitting on the porch and listening to the fountain gurgling. He looked well. I saw no sign that his end was near. Before I left, I went to the sofa and gave him a goodbye hug and said, "Take care of yourself. There are not many Weishorns left." I am so glad I did not just drive home after my dinner at Rodney's and had that last visit with Gene.
